NEVER DO THIS!

By Walt Perryman

If you ever work on your riding lawn mower, putting new belts and whatever, do not do the following:

Do not take it for a test run up hill to your automatic opening gate, and if you do, and the gate does not open, do not think you will go backwards, downhill a little ways and perhaps trip the opener. But, if you do this, do not assume you can hit the brakes and stop it, and do not assume you can put it in gear and stop the tractor from going downhill backwards at a fast but increasing speed. Now, if it is approximately 200 yards or farther downhill at increasing speed to the end of the road, do not try to rationalize why this is happening, like, did I not hook up the brake line or did I not hook up something? Do not think about stuff like that, just realize you are going backwards at a fast and increasing speed and the best thing to do, since you are going too fast to jump off, is steer, yes, steer to stay in the road. The end of the road, is getting closer and closer. Try and keep a clear mind about what you are going to do when you get to the end of your life or the end of the road. Just steer, steer looking backwards so you can tell when the end is here. Next, do not assume you can just cut back and make a u-turn and go up hill through the rocks and trees until gravity stops you, since that is your only chance of survival. Now, if you do this life surviving maneuver do not assume you will not fall half way off, not all the way off, but half way off, while making the sharp u-turn at increasing speeds. But, you can assume that the half of your body that is dragging, while you are holding on for your life to the tractor with the other half of your body, will finally slow you down and come to a stop. Now, I am not saying that I did this, I am just saying if you do something like this. I have a friend that did this, and he told me about what not to do! If I did something like this, I would never tell anyone.
