IN THE SPIRIT OF TEXAS: Crouch endowment honors character, skill

Swimming inspired Hondo Crouch's imagination and determination – two traits that ultimately defined his life.

Hondo Crouch was a father and a grandfather, a rancher and a dreamer.

Hondo grew into all those personalities, because he was a swimmer. Because he first taught himself how to swim.

Growing up in the early 1900s in a dry west Texas town, Hondo laid on a piano bench and mimicked the strokes from a mail-order how-to manual. He relied on grace more than technique, which allowed him to become an All-American and one of the first University of Texas individual Southwest Conference champions while representing the Longhorns from 1935-41.

Swimming inspired Hondo Crouch's imagination and determination – two traits that ultimately defined his life. His family swimming legacy at The University of Texas lives on through the Hondo Crouch Men's Swimming and Diving Endowment.

"There's nothing like the pride of being a Texas swimmer," said Kit Patterson, Hondo's grandson who also swam for Texas under championship coach Eddie Reese. "I cannot think of anything else on the planet you could be more proud to be part of than the UT swim team. That team is your family on campus."
